How and When to Plant Gladiolus

GLADIOLUS can be grown on any soil that will grow ordinary garden crops. The bulbs should be planted in the open, not under trees, as they require plenty of sunshine.

The first planting can be made as soon as the frost is out of the ground in April, and by making plantings at intervals of ten days to two weeks up to July 1st, it will be possible to have a succession of flowers through the Summer and Fall.

When a certain color scheme is to be carried out, or if flowers of one color are desired for cutting, named varieties should be used. Our mixture will always give satisfaction for ordinary garden use.

The bulbs may be planted three to five inches deep and about the same distance apart in the row, rows about twenty inches apart. Where only a few are grown they can be planted with a trowel in open spaces between other flowers in the garden beds or borders, or in groups, giving the bulbs the same amount of space as if planted in rows. Always keep the ground well stirred and free from weeds.

The flower spikes should be cut when not more than three or four blooms are open. The stalk should never be cut off too near the ground, not less than three leaves should be left, as they are essential to the growth that produces the new bulb. When placed in water in the house the stalks should be cut off an inch at the bottom and water renewed each day.

October is the harvest month, before frosts set in. Any cellar that will keep potatoes in good condition is suitable for storing Gladiolus bulbs.

Primulinus Hybrids Gladiolus

This type of Gladiolus was originally introduced from South Africa, and has been greatly improved by crossing with other garden varieties. They are different from the usual run of Gladiolus, as they are slender in growth, the flowers very dainty and of "hooded" type. The range of color is beautiful, and planted in fair sized groups in the garden they make a very showy display. I offer these only in mixture.

1¼ inch and up
50c. per dozen;
$3.50 per 100;
$30.00 per 1000.
